"I have been an engineer since 1987 and worked in many fields including teaching at a college. In the public sector, I have the ability to be thorough and objective. I am not swayed by profit considerations. I can take my time to collect all the facts before making a sound decision.

What I love about my job at King County is the satisfaction I get from the fact that when I do my job well, County taxpayers and citizens get safer infrastructure. Their safety is very important to us. All of us here strive to make the infrastructure better. There is enormous satisfaction in being a public servant. We feel like stewards of the communities we live in and strive to make them better.

I know that I could make more money in the private sector, but the intangibles and the satisfaction I get has a value and this alone outweighs the difference in salary for me. In the private sector, deadlines are mandated by cost considerations and it is not unusual to work 60-80 hour work-weeks. In the public sector, long term happiness outweighs the short term gains and this is very important for the employee morale. Level of workplace happiness is higher -in general- in the public sector.

All of the above as a package, convinces me to work in the public sector."
