Who is on SWAC?
- People who live outside the cities of Seattle and Milton and who use solid waste services - such as transfer station customers or people who have curbside collection of garbage and recyclables
- Recycling industry
- Labor unions’ representatives
- Local elected officials
- A marketing expert
- Public interest groups
- A manufacturer located in King County
- Waste management industry

What does SWAC do for King County?
- They give feedback to the County Executive and County Council on proposed council actions involving solid waste and recycling issues
- They assist the county in the development of solid waste and recycling programs and policies
- They read and provide comments on proposed policies, ordinances and plans before they are adopted

What does King County provide to SWAC?
- An orientation to solid waste and recycling issues
- Staff support at meetings

What abilities do we look for in a SWAC volunteer?
We look for qualities, not just credentials. We look for individuals who are:
- Interested in solid waste and recycling issues
- Able to regularly attend monthly meetings and read materials in preparation for meetings
- Willing to commit to a three-year term (limit of two consecutive terms)

How often are meetings and where are they held?
- Meetings are held on the third Friday of every month from 9:30 - 11:30 a.m.
- Meetings are held in downtown Seattle, near the Seahawks Stadium. We provide free parking and snacks. Childcare is not provided.

More information about SWAC is available at:
Your.kingcounty.gov/solidwaste/about/swac.asp
For an application or to ask questions you may also contact the Solid Waste Division’s SWAC Staff Liaison at: Dorian.Waller@kingcounty.gov or 206-263-1368

We welcome your involvement and look forward to hearing from you!
King County Solid Waste Division (SWD) provides:

- Ten conveniently located facilities where residents and businesses in King County can drop off their garbage and, at most facilities, recyclable materials.
- Operation of the 920-acre Cedar Hills Regional Landfill in Maple Valley.
- Household hazardous waste disposal options.
- Recycling education programs for schoolchildren, residents, and businesses.
- Grant money to cities to help with waste prevention and recycling programs.
- Litter cleanup on public property.

King County Garbage Facts

- King County does not pick up garbage from homes and businesses; that is done by garbage hauling companies.
- All cities in King County, except for Seattle and Milton, are part of the county’s solid waste system.
- More than 930,000 tons of solid waste is disposed each year in King County and ends up in the County’s Cedar Hills Regional Landfill. (2017)
- In 2017, 31,600 county residents and small businesses disposed of 788 tons of hazardous waste.
- In 2017, single family customers in King County recycled 56 percent of their wastes [note: the percent didn’t change from 2012]
- In 2017, nearly 72 percent of the garbage received at King County’s facilities was delivered by curbside collection trucks, while about 28 percent was brought by businesses and residents – people who “self-haul” their garbage. These self-haulers make up more than 87 percent of the traffic at the facilities.
- King County’s garbage and recycling facilities serve 1.47 million people, or about 68 percent of King County’s population. (2017)

SWD’s Environmental Priorities

- Protect public health and the environment
- Conserve natural resources
- Reduce the overall amount of material thrown away

King County Boards and Commissions

More than 480 volunteers serve on King County’s 49 boards and commissions. These volunteers advise the Executive and the King County Council on policies and programs affecting residents of King County.

The King County Solid Waste Advisory Committee (SWAC) is one of these 49 boards and commissions. SWAC members are appointed by the King County Executive and confirmed by the Metropolitan King County Council. SWAC selects its own chair, adopts rules of order, and conducts its own meetings.