We want to keep youth in their communities, out of the Juvenile Court system, or if already involved, keep them from going “down the pike” to further involvement.

This requires a community safety net that works smoothly together to help youth grow, and empowers youth and families.

Background and Related Initiatives

The Mission of Uniting for Youth is to improve the effectiveness, efficiency and coordination of services, policies and practices in youth-serving agencies in King County.

Uniting for Youth originated as a Models for Change Initiative funded by the MacArthur Foundation in 2004, and developed beyond the funding period. It grows from and connects to other reform initiatives, such as the Juvenile Justice Operational Master Plan (JJOMP) which began in 1998. Technical assistance or funding has been provided by partners including the Annie E. Casey Foundation, Federal Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, Robert Woods Johnson Foundation, The MacArthur Foundation, Gates Foundation, and the Center for Children and Youth Justice. Uniting for Youth has been held up by the MacArthur Foundation and other partners as a national model for other jurisdictions to emulate.

Problem:

Youth that enter into the King County Juvenile Justice System are often involved in multiple youth-serving systems such as Child Welfare, Behavioral Health, etc. However, often these systems aren’t taught how to collaborate.

Research: Doorways to Delinquency (2011), found that for Court-Involved Youth in King County:

- About 2/3rd of youth in juvenile criminal court in 2006 had involvement in the child welfare system.
- Greater involvement relates to more jail time and higher recidivism.
- 73% have mental health and/or substance abuse disorders with most having multiple disorders, and high rates of trauma.

Successes: Uniting for Youth

Implemented a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between multiple County and State agencies, declaring and formalizing their collaborative partnership for youth served by multiple systems.

Provided Support to youth-serving systems in the effort to reduce juvenile incarceration and increase youth diversion, including the provision of multi-dimensional assessments, and services to youth in their communities.

Produced informational materials in partnership with the Seattle Police to assist law enforcement in diverting youth from detention and helping youth access services. Also developed informational fliers for families on how to work with multiple service systems.

Created an Information-Sharing Guide for staff working across youth-serving systems, approved by all agency’s Attorney Generals, showing staff how to share information within existing laws.

Created and Implemented Cross-System Protocols - Working agreements that detail joint policies and procedures for Juvenile Court, Probation and Children’s Administration staff, to facilitate collaboration for youth and their families.

Provides Cross System Training – Quarterly joint system training for staff from youth serving systems to encourage shared responsibility and linked services. Completed over 17 trainings for over 2500 participants.

Examinined data via Doorways to Delinquency: Illustrated the prevalence of multi-system involvement among youth referred to the King County Juvenile Court.

Holds Monthly Partnership Meetings - Bringing together Child Welfare, Juvenile Justice, Behavioral Health, Education and related systems in King County to identify successful collaborations and work together on areas needing improvement.

Promotes Educational Integration – Developed a model (Pathnet) and strategic plan for addressing the needs of youth in the Juvenile Justice system who have dropped out of school or are at risk of dropping out. Created alternative school options for youth to complete high school and move on to college or a career. Successfully implemented this plan in multiple school districts.

Promotes Education of Youth and Families about the Juvenile Justice System via support for the Juvenile Justice 101 Initiative.

Regularly Evaluates the work of the Initiative, systems interactions, and the state of multi-system youth in King County.

Connections to MIDD

Uniting for Youth supports MIDD (Mental Illness, Drug Dependency) funded strategies that serve high-needs youth and reduce incarceration. Uniting for Youth and these programs’ goals are aligned, and they regularly collaborate.
